Legends of Classic Rock (LOCR) have proven that true rock and roll never goes out of style.

About

Legends of Classic Rock (LOCR) have proven that true rock and roll never goes out of style.

This powerhouse supergroup is a high-octane collection of some of the most respected names in hard rock history. With a collective 30 million records sold and a dozen Billboard Hot 100 hits between them, the band has transformed their individual legacies into a live experience that is as much a celebration of their own platinum hits as it is a tribute to the era they helped define.

While the band has been rocking massive tours and headlining the world's largest cruise ships since 2022, they exploded into a new level of pop-culture relevance in 2025. Partnering with Starbucks for the launch of their Iced Energy drink line, Legends of Classic Rock starred in a national campaign that quickly became a viral sensation.

The commercial—a cheeky, high-energy homage to the iconic 2004 "Glen" ad—featured the band following an everyday office worker named Roy (and later, late-night host Seth Meyers) while performing a personalized, rock-fueled rendition of Survivor's "Eye of the Tiger." With over 40 million streams in just its first few weeks, the campaign showcased the band's rare ability to shred with intensity while maintaining a self-mocking sense of humor.

The brilliance of LOCR lies in the individual pedigrees of its members, each of whom played a pivotal role in the soundtrack of a generation:

Terry Ilous: Great White and XYZ.
Greg D'Angelo: White Lion
Chuck Wright: Quiet Riot and Alice Cooper.
Jake Faun: David Lee Roth
Chris Turbis: Lynyrd Skynyrd and Great White

Whether they are motivating office workers on TV, performing for thousands on the Icon of the Seas, or bringing the house down at the Whisky a Go Go, Legends of Classic Rock are more than a tribute—they are the real deal. They don't just play the hits; they are the hits, delivering a "night of your life" experience every time they step on stage.
